Word Lens is a free downloadable app to use to translate an image or text based on an online database of text. If you have a Nexus S, it is worth trying out as it uses the camera to identify any words you hold up to the screen and displays them in a separate language. The Word Lens feature only works on the Nexus S as it uses the phone's camera and its ability to identify characters to display the translation. It is apparently more reliable than using the speech recognition engine to do the translation as it doesn't often produce the wrong character. What's New In?

The easiest way to convert text to HTML is to open the program, and copy or type your text. After you've done this, just click the Convert button and select the output format in the second section of the 'Convert Text to HTML' window (if you can't see it, you must choose the 3rd option from the drop-down menu). Notice that, when you type text, you will see the code in the 'Input' section of the window. After the conversion is complete, the converted text will appear in the 'Output' section, as well as a link that will help you generate the code for insertion in your website. Useful Features: This excellent program is fully configurable. You can specify the layout, fonts, pictures and colors using buttons, from where you can make any change you wish. You can use a timer or kill the program when it has finished processing your text, or only when you specify a specific time. Having access to different Fonts in the program is really helpful because a page may need to be displayed in different languages. This program can be set up to display the converted page on your desktop or to email it to you or others. Added to this, when you are done, you can easily stop the program and just let the file continue to run in the background without your intervention.
