But it assumes a standard list-view with pagination. I have different views in my app - Text-based, images, graphs, etc. I found a few gems for pagination and infinite scrolling when using Q1, but it seems too simple for Q2. My question - how can I achieve this in Q2. Do I need to use Q1 and then re-import my components for Q2? A: I think this is how you could implement this behavior in Q2: Use a queue as an infinite collection, a "buffer" - you'll not lose any data, while it will always contain the newest data available, Add a timer, Set it to 1 second, that is more or less all you need to implement this behavior. You still need to check if the current item on the view does not fit the view content, if you want it to scroll out of bounds, if it should always scroll, or if it should only scroll once, or if it should animate on it's own etc. Nick Saban's offense under center is among the most sophisticated and prolific attack in the country. The Crimson Tide's quarterback is among the quickest to diagnose and call out defensive coverages. His scheme demands hard-throwing, mobile quarterbacks who can escape the pocket and extend drives. And though he doesn't like to admit it, Saban will be without the services of his top quarterback prospect for the foreseeable future. In fact, Alabama's offense is down at least one elite talent and will also be without starting running back Damien Harris for the rest of the season. Tua Tagovailoa Though the true freshman has completed 74 percent of his passes and thrown for 2,467 yards and 29 touchdowns, he's been injured most of the season. That injury was his right ankle, which he injured in a win at Ole Miss in mid-September. He missed the remainder of the regular season and Plasma concentrations of high-density lipoprotein (HDL) are lower in patients with coronary heart disease than in healthy subjects and, inversely, plasma concentrations of low-density lipoproteins (LDL) are higher in coronary heart disease patients than in healthy subjects. Both HDL and LDL are enriched in cholesteryl esters, the content of which correlates with the risk of coronary heart disease. Retinyl esters, the major vitamin A precursor in HDL, can be directly converted to retinoic acid (RA) in vitro. The importance of this in vivo was assessed in a large prospective study. Plasma retinyl esters were measured in 2,971 healthy subjects, who were followed for a median of 11.9 years. Plasma concentrations of retinyl esters were strongly associated with smoking (multivariate 1cdb36666d
