Ricardo Campos de Araujo - Brazil Ricardo Campos de Araujo's company began using AutoCAD in 2013. He works with AutoCAD to maintain parts of its software and all of its documentation. AutoCAD is a software that he uses every day, and he has found it to be a very useful and efficient tool in his job. The company's developers rely on him to provide suggestions, help, and advice on how to improve the software. The company's website is designed in Adobe Fireworks and runs on the LAMP stack. Nicole Anthony - Australia Nicole Anthony, a Senior Graphics Designer, has been working with AutoCAD for five years. She works with AutoCAD to maintain parts of its software. She has found it to be a very useful and efficient tool in her work. Nicole Anthony - Australia Nicole Anthony says that one of the things she loves about AutoCAD is its simplicity. She loves that there is only one way to do something. She loves that, unlike other CAD software, there is no starting up a new document. She loves that there is only one way to create something and that there is no dividing a project into pieces. She loves that she can create lines, arcs, splines, and multi-segmented lines by just pressing a key on the keyboard. She loves that AutoCAD is highly reliable. She loves that there is only one way to do something and there is no need to wonder if you are doing it correctly or not. She loves that the documentation is very good, and that there is a lot of it. Most of the company's members are also freelance artists and illustrators who create AutoCAD guides and tutorials for free, and most of them spend a lot of time on Wikipedia and YouTube. Helena Moreno - Spain Helena Moreno, a senior technical manager, has been working with AutoCAD since 2007. She works with AutoCAD to maintain parts of its software. She says that she loves the

Open architecture Autodesk can sell products other than AutoCAD, including Intentional Ink and the other animation and animation editing software; AutoCAD LT (a simplified version of AutoCAD, designed for web-based, kiosk, or thin client deployment); the relational database management system; Design Review; MotionBuilder, the video editing software; D-Flow, an intelligent data cleaning and management software; and Painter, a highly specialized version of Photoshop for viewing DWG files. History Autodesk started as an engineering firm in 1968. According to New-Vistas, Autodesk had around 500 employees. In 1972, Autodesk introduced the first DRAW-based CAD program, AutoCAD. The first to complete a 2D CAD project was Lloyd Wilson, who was hired to design the first nuclear power plant at Boundary Dam. The first 3D CAD program, 3D Primitive, was released in 1973. It was replaced with Intergraph 3D Systems (I3D) in 1974. In 1975, Autodesk started selling AutoCAD on a subscription basis, charging $1,200 annually for the first five users, rising to $4,500 annually in 1984. By that time, Autodesk employed 500 people. In 1977, Autodesk changed its name from AeSy to Autodesk. In 1990, Autodesk bought rival CAD company SKANCO. In 1998, Autodesk bought Pragmatic Programmers, maker of StarDock and PlanMaker software. In 1999, Autodesk acquired NewWave Software. In 2000, Autodesk acquired Intergraph. In 2001, Autodesk bought Softimage. In 2003, Autodesk purchased Inventor, the commercial product formerly known as Delcam, and continued to develop it as a separate product. In 2004, Autodesk acquired Coventor, a CAD technologies provider. In 2005, Autodesk acquired Parametrics. In 2006, Autodesk acquired Radiance, a high-end software for 3D content authoring and collaboration, and renamed it as the Autodesk Value Creation Product. Autodesk also acquired the rights to sell the discontinued Design Review product and the R&D team that developed it, moving Design Review into Autodesk's design department. The Design Review software was renamed Autodesk Design Review, and continued to be available as a separate software product. In 2009, Autodesk acquired Autodesk

Carburizing process is to introduce carbon into the surface of a coated metallic material to form an oxygen-free structure to be a hard and dense layer, which can be applied to the coating on a metal surface of a mechanical component, to make the mechanical component become a stronger and more wear resistant. Currently, a general carburizing process for a coated metallic material is carried out in a chamber filled with a mixed gas of a combustible gas and a carrier gas, and as shown in FIG. 1, the process includes the following steps. First, when a coating is coated on a surface of a metallic material, a mixed gas of a combustible gas and a carrier gas is filled into a chamber 11 to provide a protective gas, to form a mixed protective gas, and the coated metallic material is inserted into the chamber 11. Next, the mixed protective gas is heated by a heating source 12, and the mixed protective gas is transported to the metallic material under a pressure of a carrier gas 13 and combusted, so that the carbon contained in the combustible gas of the mixed protective gas can be oxidized and absorbed on the surface of the metallic material, and the mixed protective gas is converted into a mixed gas with a mixed gas of a combustible gas and a carrier gas, and the
