Spinal cord compression can occur with progression of disease and might be the first manifestation of myelomatosis. Patients with myelomatosis therefore need to be screened for osteoporosis. The aim of this case report is to illustrate the difficulty in assessing bone mineral density in a patient with myelomatosis, for whom diagnosis of osteoporosis is not clear. Radiographs were performed to investigate vertebral and rib fractures. Dual-energy X-ray absorptiometry examination was performed for further assessment of bone density. We report a 56-year-old man who presented with new fractures of the second, third, and fourth ribs on x-ray. At the same time he was diagnosed with myelomatosis. Bone density was increased. He was put on bisphosphonates, but later on he was admitted with myeloma progression. At diagnosis of myelomatosis, one should be aware of the low sensitivity of x-ray c6a93da74d
