Weird. I just installed this and it didn't work. I plugged it into a PC running Windows 8.1 (and in fact, plugged it into a few different ones). But every time, it said that there was no driver to install. I plugged it into a laptop with a previous version of Ubuntu but it didn't work either. It said the driver was missing. I looked at the Linux driver on the Brother website and just realized it for the Epson DUX-1511W. Are there different drivers for different brands? If you want to use another machine without Internet, you need an internet connection to download the driver and to verify the precompiled kerl module. I suggest you use WinSCP. Download Winscp from the website - even though I could use WinSCP and a console session, I am a Mac guy, so I would have used a GUI. (But you can use Winscp inside a console if you prefer. For tips on how to log in to your Windows machine remotely, see here. Note that, by default, WinSCP will use a "server certificate" to authenticate itself. In order to use your own certificate, you need to set the AuthType to "certificate", then choose a certificate from your keychain. You may want to generate a self-signed certificate for this purpose (see the screen shot of the certificate generation interface here. Once you have generated a self-signed certificate, download it to your Mac. Using the command line (or using another SSH client) follow these steps: To install the driver, you need to create a directory for the precompiled driver module. So, type cd to the directory where the driver files are (I think they are in the "/myfavoritepcname" directory), then do:
