the court is aware of other relatively recent cases that have been brought in the wake of the 2009 political campaign season, in which individuals have apparently registered domain names in the name of their campaign, but the court is unaware of any such cases in which a plaintiff has brought suit against the individual who has registered the domain name, in the midst of a political campaign. see, e.g., united we stand america, inc. v. klayman, 657 f. supp. 2d 498 (e.d.va.2009) (ruling in favor of political organization in suit against individual candidate for state-wide office); finley v. deutsche, 2008 wl 5264862 (d.c.2008) (ruling in favor of political organization in suit against individual candidate for u.s. congressional seat). the court's decision in this case is not an endorsement of one type of political campaign over another. indeed, the court can see no good reason why a non-profit corporation involved in politics would not be entitled to use its trademarks to promote its political views, as long as it does so in a manner that does not jeopardize its right to free speech. but the court cannot say that the defendants in this case have gone to any length to avoid any commensurate danger of confusion. indeed, as the preceding passage makes plain, there is a distinct possibility that the name of the article of clothing called the pink panther will soon be translated into a political slogan for the next political campaign. under these circumstances, the court believes that it cannot say that there was a clear danger that the plaintiff would suffer irreparable harm.

at the louvre museum, a cunning criminal, played by steve martin, steals a priceless pink panther diamond. he then sends it to a receiver, who takes it to a museum in paris, and sells it to a buyer who works for the french mafia. there, the diamond is stolen from the buyer and then sold to a fence who sells it on to a jeweler. the jeweler then sells it to an antiquities dealer, played by the hilarious actor, jean reno, who agrees to sell it to a museum in tokyo.
