I've been developing for computers for over 40 years. For the bulk of my career I worked for a large contract software company where everything was top secret. We had a lot of fun and had lots of work for users to do. But on the other hand it wasn't really a very creative environment. Once I moved to working for a small company in Toronto they had just bought the Photoshop product. I really enjoyed the creative environment and was never able to see a need to move to another company. I've been at Adobe for about 12 years and every day it's just a lot of fun. Photoshop is a great tool for editing images. I use it at every step of the way in my new work. I use PS for about 95% of my work. I also use Photoshop Elements for a few of my client projects. I love the look of elements and the toolset it provides. Great Adobe software. But I run into problems with it. I'd like to be able to see "undo" for a section of the photo taken. That way I could insert or delete edits from the section without undoing every edit I had made. I could take areas out of an image and only undo the unwanted area. It doesn't work that way and I have to revert to undoing everything and editing back the problems out of the way instead. Adobe Photoshop is the ideal tool for my photography. There are many different tools that may be a good fit for other kinds of photography. Designers will have other graphic tools that produce files similar to or identical to EPS. Advertising photography, however, requires an image processing tool that is intuitive, fast, and precise--Photoshop is perfect for this kind of photography.
