I want it to be able to download the file regardless of user input (ie, without using a command-line tool or using the cron daemon as a user). I can download the file with wget, but I'm using it in a script where I want to be able to check the status of the command. A: It's probably sufficient to use a simple shell script with: wget --quiet -c -C -np ftp://user:pass@ftp.server.net/file That will pass all the needed options to wget and log all the progress to stdout. But be advised that starting a wget in that manner would download the file to the same location on the server where it's uploaded to in the first place. The URL above downloads it to current directory, regardless of the -C or -c or -np options. Q: Getting NullPointerException when running my test Hello everyone I am still at beginner in programming java and I am facing a problem when I am trying to run my test that I'm writing for my class. When I am running my test I am getting the following exception:
